“We were blind but now we see”

Fearing he had lost control of the class of new students, a Senegal literacy teacher finally restored order. Thinking they were simply distracted, he asked them to explain the commotion. One student stood up and exclaimed, “We were blind, but now we see!”

He explained that trying to read the letters on the paper felt like being blind. He explained that before he could read, words looked like the “scratchings of a guinea fowl with muddy feet dancing on a paper.” Now as a result of his new learning, the marks have become meaningful.

These new literacy students no longer are just pronouncing sounds. They read and can understand!

With these new reading skills, the Fogny people of Senegal will discover the light dawning when they can read God’s Word translated into their language!
